The “baliza a” emerged from the idea of creating a self-illuminated object that emits a grazing light from the inside without identifying the light source at first glance.

It has an archetypal morphology of a half sphere, similar to a primitive cave or a dome. The goal was to create a mysterious piece that did not have a classic beacon typology. The result is a concrete artifact with two opposite faces, the convex one, illuminated during the day with sunlight, and the concave one, which emits a warm light that bathes the ground while taking on a life of its own.

Its name is Gaia, the goddess of the earth in Greek mythology, which comes to life through light.

La baliza a surgió de la idea de crear un objeto auto-iluminado que transmita una luz rasante en su interior sin detectar la fuente de luz a primera vista.

Tiene una morfología arquetípica de media esfera, similar a una cueva primitiva o una cúpula. El objetivo era crear una pieza misteriosa, que no tuviera una tipología clásica de baliza.

El resultado es un artefacto de hormigón que tiene dos caras opuestas, la convexa, que se ilumina de día con la luz solar y la cóncava, que emana una luz cálida que baña el suelo a la vez que cobra vida propia.

Su nombre es GAIA diosa de la tierra en la mitología griega, que mediante la luz cobra vida.

“Its morphology evokes the archetype of the sphere, an organic form without edges that merges with the landscape in a natural way”.
